

Research on the Concept and Implementation Strategies of Affective Education in Primary School Chinese Curriculum

Yao Huang

Changsha Normal University, Changsha, Hunan, China

Abstract: Emotional education occupies an important position in the Chinese curriculum of primary schools, aiming to cultivate students' emotional expression, comprehension and management skills. Through literary reading, opportunities for emotional expression, and the development of emotional comprehension and sharing, teachers can help students build a healthy emotional world. Follow the principles of motivation, practicality, and individualization to ensure that each student receives the appropriate emotional education and development. Emotional education not only influences students' emotional development, but also shapes their outlook on life and values, laying the foundation for their future life and work.

Keywords: Chinese Curriculum in Primary Schools; Emotional Education; Emotional Development

Emotional education plays a vital role in the Chinese curriculum in primary schools. As the basic subject of primary education, the Chinese curriculum contains rich literary connotations and provides students with rich emotional experiences and perceptions. Emotional education aims to develop students' emotional expression, comprehension, and management skills, so that they can better communicate and cooperate with others. This article will discuss the concept and implementation strategies of emotional education in the Chinese curriculum of primary schools, in order to provide teachers with useful references and promote students' emotional development and healthy growth.

1. The Concept of Emotional Education in the Chinese Curriculum of Primary Schools

Emotional education occupies a core position in the primary school Chinese curriculum, and it has a profound impact on students' emotional development and the shaping of values. As a basic subject in primary school, Chinese provides students with rich emotional experience and perception due to its rich literary connotation. These works of literature often contain deep emotional implications, and through learning and appreciating these works, students are exposed to a variety of emotions and thus learn how to understand and express their emotions [1]. Such an education not only helps to develop students' emotional intelligence and emotional intelligence, but also helps to shape their positive, healthy emotional attitudes. The goal of emotional education is not only to enable students to master the skills of emotional expression, but more importantly, to cultivate their emotional understanding and emotional management skills. This means that students must not only be able to perceive and express their own emotions, but also be able to understand and respect the emotions of others. This ability is essential for students' interpersonal and team collaboration, helping them to better communicate and work with others. A student with good emotional understanding and management skills is more likely to demonstrate good interpersonal skills and teamwork in life and work in the future.

In order to achieve these goals of emotional education, teachers need to follow several important principles in the teaching process, which are the principle of motivation. Teachers need to create a positive and positive emotional atmosphere for students to grow in an environment full of sunshine and positive energy. Through positive emotional experiences, students are able to develop an optimistic, uplifting mindset and be better equipped to face life's challenges. Practical principle, emotional education should not only stay at the theoretical level, but also allow students to experience emotions through practical activities. Teachers can organize activities such as role-plays, group discussions, etc., so that students have the opportunity to participate in the expression and exchange of emotions first-hand. Such hands-on activities not only enhance students' emotional expression skills, but also help improve their emotional comprehension and management skills. Finally, there is the principle of personalization. Each student has unique emotional needs and characteristics, and teachers need to pay attention to and respect these differences. In emotional education, it is important to teach students according to their aptitude. By understanding the emotional needs and characteristics of each student, teachers can provide them with personalized emotional education programs to ensure that each student receives the right emotional development opportunities for them.

2. Implementation Strategies of Emotional Education in Primary School Chinese Curriculum

2.1 Integrate Literary Reading

In the digital age, high school history teaching and literature reading are closely integrated to jointly build an emotional and intelligent teaching environment. The reading of literary works is no longer a simple transmission of knowledge, but a touch of the heart and the cultivation of emotions^[2]. These works are like windows into history, allowing students to get a glimpse of the inner world of historical figures, feel their joys, sorrows, and understand their decisions and choices. In order to ensure that students can derive deep emotional experience and develop emotional abilities, teachers need to conduct careful selection. The works they chose should not only have rich emotional connotations, but also show a deep humanistic spirit. These works resonate with students, stimulate their thinking, and enable them to explore and self-reflect in reading.

Teacher guidance plays a crucial role in this process. They encourage students to actively participate in emotional experiences and emotional exchanges, pushing them to dig deeper into the emotional entanglements behind historical events and characters. This approach not only enables students to gain a deeper understanding of history, but also develops their insight into human nature and their sensitivity to emotions. The diversity of teaching methods is also the key to enhancing the emotional experience and the effectiveness of emotional communication. In addition to traditional reading methods, teachers can also introduce role-playing, reading aloud, discussions, and other forms. These activities enable students to participate more actively in the interpretation of literary works, not only to deepen their understanding of the themes and emotions of the works, but also to improve their emotional expression and interpersonal skills in interactions.

2.2 Provide Opportunities for Emotional Expression

Emotional expression has irreplaceable value in the Chinese classroom. Teachers, as facilitators, should strive to create a free and relaxed atmosphere that encourages students to open up and share their emotions and opinions. Every student is a unique individual with a unique way of experiencing and expressing emotions. Therefore, teachers need to show great respect and ensure that every student is understood and cared for, and that the classroom is warm and inclusive. Class discussions provide a platform for students to exchange emotions. It is a platform where students are able to freely share their own opinions and feelings, while also being able to listen to others. This interaction helps them understand emotions more deeply and learn to see things from a different perspective. To motivate students to engage in discussions, teachers can craft meaningful topics that resonate with students by being closely related to their real-life and emotional experiences. By engaging students in discussions, teachers are able to develop critical thinking and empathy not only in their emotional expressions.

Writing is a way for students to explore and express their emotions in depth. In the world of words, students can delicately depict their inner emotions and thoughts, so that the expression of emotions is more in-depth and delicate. Teachers can assign some emotionally related writing tasks, such as journaling, reflections, and story writing, to encourage students to write down their true feelings and experiences^[3]. In the process of writing, teachers can also give guidance on some writing skills, such as how to describe emotions and how to use rhetorical devices, to help students better express their emotions. In addition to class discussion and writing, teachers can use other forms to stimulate students' emotional expression. Activities such as role-playing and recitation allow students to experience the expression of emotions in performances, which not only exercises their emotional expression skills, but also enhances their self-confidence and creativity. Through hands-on role-playing, students are able to gain a deeper understanding of the emotional world of the characters and improve their emotional perception. Recitation is a rhythmic and musical way of expressing emotions, through which students can express their inner emotions and develop their own emotional expression skills.

2.3 Cultivate the Ability to Understand and Share Emotions

The development of emotional understanding and sharing skills is an integral part of the educational process. Especially in the teaching of high school history, teachers need to actively guide students to deeply understand the emotional world of historical events and characters, and cultivate their emotional understanding and care for others. Through cooperative learning activities and group discussions, students can better understand the emotions of others, learn to listen to and respect others' perspectives, and promote the sharing and communication of emotions. In cooperative learning, students are divided into small groups to discuss a historical topic. They can share their own opinions, feelings, and experiences, and listen to others' insights, thereby increasing their understanding of emotions in their interactions. Through group discussions, students can exercise their communication skills and critical thinking, learn to look at problems from multiple perspectives, and enhance their sensitivity to emotions.

In addition to cooperative learning activities, teachers can guide students to record and express their own emotional experiences in writing. Writing is an effective way to express emotions, which allows students to put their inner emotions and thoughts into words, making the expression of emotions clearer and deeper. Through writing, students can reflect on their own emotional experiences and enhance emotional empathy and emotional communication. In order to further develop students' emotional understanding and sharing skills, teachers can also employ other teaching methods. For example, teachers can organize role-play activities that allow students to experience their emotional world by playing historical figures. Through immersive performances, students are able to gain a deeper understanding of the emotional entanglements of historical figures and develop a sense of care and understanding for the emotions of others.

3. Conclusion

Emotional education is an indispensable part of the primary school Chinese curriculum. It is not only about the emotional development of students, but also affects the formation of their outlook on life and values. Through the cultivation of literary reading, emotional expression, and emotional understanding and sharing, emotional education can provide students with rich emotional experiences and perceptions, and help them establish a positive and healthy emotional world. In the process of implementing emotional education, teachers need to follow the principles of motivation, practicality, and individualization to ensure that each student receives appropriate emotional education and development. Emotional education not only helps to cultivate students' emotional intelligence and emotional intelligence, but also helps them build good interpersonal and teamwork skills. This kind of emotional education has a profound impact on the holistic development of students, laying a strong foundation for their future life and work.

References

- [1] Fan Xiaoping. Research on the strategy of integrating emotional education into primary school Chinese curriculum[J]. Taste & Classics, 2022, (07): 159-161.
- [2] Li Aiwen. Research on the strategy of integrating emotional education into primary school Chinese curriculum[J]. Tiantianai Science(Frontiers of Education), 2021, (05): 15-16.
- [3] Feng Lurong. Affective education in primary school Chinese teaching under the background of the new curriculum[A]. South China Education Informatization Research Experience Exchange Meeting 2021 Paper Compilation (2)[C]. Fujian Provincial Association of Commerce and Trade, Fujian Provincial Association of Commerce and Trade, 2021: 2.